POLICE REPORT

Electronics stolen

Hannah Blick | COLLEGIAN

More than $1,000 in home electronics were stolen from an Ogden man's home earlier this month, according to a report from the Riley County Police Department.

The incident occurred sometime between 8 a.m. on February 7 and 8 p.m. on February 22, said RCPD Lt. Herbert Crosby Jr.

Jeremy Hockett, 33, of 211 C. Seventh St., Ogden, Kan., reported the items stolen from his home earlier this week. The items include four computer parts, valued at $540; one TV, valued $300; one Wii game console, valued at $250; three Wii games, worth $60; and one headset, worth $85, for a total estimated value of $1295, according to the report.

No arrests in the case have been made.

WIN | Oliver
calls win 'dream
come true'

As the moment neared for the announcement of the winning campaigns, about 100 people packed the room. When it was revealed that the Unruh / Oliver campaign had won 31 percent of the vote and would advance to the general election, the room roared with applause.

Oliver was speechless as she looked for words to describe the emotion on her face.

"It's a dream come true," she said.

Unruh and Oliver stood on the bar to thank their supporters.

"We're here everybody, in for round two," Unruh said. "Everyone sacrificed a lot of time and Annie and I are confident we can win."

Quotable quote:

"Always vote for principle, though you may vote alone, and you may cherish the sweetest reflection that your vote is never lost. "

Quality Control

Government principles do not align with actions

Today many social studies textbooks would classify our nation as an ethnic and cultural patchwork. As U.S. citizens, we embrace the fact we have people of all nationalities, religions and backgrounds living and working alongside us. The founding fathers acknowledged in the Declaration of Independence that all men were created equal, regardless of race, nationality or religion. Yet, do we really believe this in all aspects of government? Perhaps we do not, as the federal government's Disadvantaged Business Enterprise (DBE) program shows.

Many Americans are completely unaware of this program. The program, which pertains mostly to federal contracting work such as the construction of highways and buildings, requires a certain monetary percentage of each project be awarded to a firm that is deemed "disadvantaged." A firm can be disadvantaged only if the title of the business is held by a person who is either a minority, female or handicapped.

While the program's intent to spread federal funds out to various firms seems well and good, the effects of this program have some considerably negative connotations. Often times, firms that qualify for DBE status are under-qualified and perform sub-standard work at a higher cost. Additionally, the DBE program has caused some business owners to falsify their information in order to obtain status.

History shows us that the DBE program produces a product of lesser quality for a much higher price. As taxpayers, we should be concerned about the stewardship of those we have elected. Paying a specific set of businesses top dollar for a bottom-dollar quality product is nonsensical. If we are all equal as the Declaration of Independence states we are, the actions of our government should reflect that principle. We need to move away from the socialistic economic policy that is currently in place and move back toward the more laissez-faire school of thought of the past.

I'm all for equal opportunities and small business enterprises. As Ronald Reagan said, "Entrepreneurs and their small enterprises are responsible for almost all the economic growth in the United States."

It is a proven fact that we need small business and entrepreneurs to survive economically. I also think it is great that we are starting to see the diversification of business owners spread to females and minorities. However, I am against the poor stewardship of our federal tax dollars that this program is encouraging. The DBE program applies poor economic policy and rewards companies and businesses for factors that are completely random, such as race and gender. Additionally, the program reduces the heartbeat of American capitalism by stripping away the ability for businesses to compete with one another.

If we are to become fiscally responsible as a nation, we need to stop handing out money bags hand over fist and start requiring privatized companies to compete with one another to provide the best quality service as the most reasonable price possible. By doing so, we would reduce spending significantly on the construction of highways, buildings and other contract-oriented service while at the same time upping the quality of these vital services.

The national deficit is climbing higher and higher every day. Isn't it about time that we start taking action to do something about it?

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT'S DESK

Lectures bring 'best and finest'

Dear Wildcats,

K-State was very fortunate to host Dennis C. Blair, director of national intelligence, as a Landon Lecture speaker this past week. The Landon Lecture series is a K-State tradition that brings some of the nation's most prominent political and public figures to our campus.

Throughout my time here at K-State I have been fortunate enough to see many Landon Lecture speakers, including past Presidents Bill Clinton and George W. Bush. The lecture series is an integral part of K-State's mission to excel as an academic institution. This lecture series brings only the best and finest to our campus.

The Landon Lectures are in honor of one of Kansas' most prominent historical politicians, Alfred M. Landon. Landon served as governor of our great state and campaigned for U.S. President. The K-State Landon Lecture series started in 1966 with a lecture from Alfred M. Landon himself.

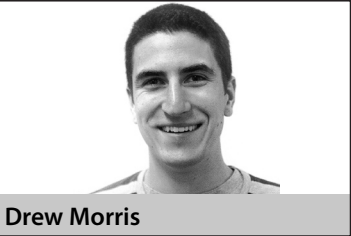

Since that time, K-State has hosted six U.S. Presidents, numerous U.S. Senators and Representatives, as well as more than five presidents from other nations. The list is not limited to politicians however; past speakers have also included Nobel Peace Prize winners, major newspaper editors, human rights activists and directors of various prestigious organizations.

If you did not have the opportunity to attend Dennis C. Blair's lecture on Monday, I encourage you to watch his lecture online at ome.ksu.edu/lectures/landon/past.

Also, look forward to the second Landon Lecture this semester on March 3 at 4 p.m. This lecture is less than a week away, and features the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Michael G. Mullen. This will be a lecture you won't want to miss. I look forward to seeing you all there.

Yellow journalism thriving on Internet

Thanks to the Internet, a fad from the past has re-emerged to haunt the journalism world: yellow journalism. Yellow journalism occurs when news and media become sensationalized and focus more on attention-grabbing headlines than legitimate reporting. Unfortunately, some of the media being published today by amateur journalists and bloggers leans towards this tendency.

Nowadays, everyone can post whatever they like on their Twitter accounts, post videos on YouTube and create their own political blogs. Never has communication and news been so easy to access for the general public. The problem lies with the rules of journalism, and how they are misapplied by the masses.

It is hard for news to not become sensationalized when amateurs can take video of an incident and post it on YouTube with their own commentary. When the public watches these videos of important events, they may take into account the opinion of the poster.

According to mediacultures.net, as of March 2008, 78.3 million videos were estimated to be on YouTube and 2.6 percent of those videos fall into the "news" category. They estimated that 80.5 percent of the total videos were made by amateurs.

Illustration by Erin Logan

That means that a little more than 150,000 amateur news videos were published on YouTube as of 2008. Two years later, we can only imagine how that number has increased.

One problem of independently produced news comes with the lack of fact-checking that goes into the process. With the individually-created YouTube videos and political blogs comes little financial investment, which is exactly what makes them so popular to create. With only the individual credibility to lend their articles and no money for fact-checking, there comes a mass of biased and inaccurate information on the web.

It's analogous to Wikipedia. Your professors won't let you use it as a source, but it might be a good place to start while researching a topic. You have to doubt and analyze everything that you read, and check other sources before claiming anything to be true.

Progress comes with groups like groundreport.com, which according to their Web site, "is a citizen news portal that enables anyone to instantly publish articles, photos and video to a global audience." They also send all reports to a team of editors before they publish them, to ensure correctness and professionalism.

What we need are more outlets like this in which people can report news as it happens right in front of them, but in an edited manner. While most people's intentions may be pure, their ability as journalists may be lacking.

News stations and journalists cannot always be on the scene as news occurs and sometimes amateur footage helps. We need to make sure, however, that this footage finds its way through an appropriate outlet before it is published.

We have entered an age in which traditional print journalism is falling by the wayside. What cannot fall to the curb is professionalism in journalism. We must still hold ourselves to an unbiased and informative view of what happened as best we can. Without this, we will be lost in a sea of propaganda and sensationalist media.

Those Were the Days

Traditions provide windows to the past of K-State

Melissa M. Taylor | COLLEGIAN

The traditions of K-State began long before the university was deemed Kansas State University. Traditions tied students together through class rivalries. They linked them to school pride during sporting events and academic success. Traditions created links, among all, to K-State.

“Traditions are the heart and soul of a university,” said Pat Patton, university archivist. “It’s the spirit of a school and it’s the essence of traditions that brings everyone together. Students today have a lock on all the fun traditions, but if you look back to the early years of the university, they had a fun time too.”

In 1858, Bluemont Central College was founded in Manhattan by the Methodist Episcopal Church. Four years later, Bluemont College was given to the state of Kansas and was renamed Kansas State Agricultural College. In 1931, the university became Kansas State College of Agriculture and Applied Science, and in 1959 it took on today’s title of Kansas State University.

THE SHEPHERD’S CROOK

The class of 1898 decided to bring something new to campus: a long shepherd’s crook, symbolizing the senior shepherds herding the freshmen flock.

Like the spade, the shepherd’s crook instilled campus tomfoolery. The class of 1900 refused to receive the symbol, but that did not stop the class of 1899 from tying a black ribbon to its staff with the numbers ‘00 and hiding the crook from public viewing. However, the crook did not stay in hiding long, as it was presented to the class of 1901.

The crook was passed from 1898 to 1938, when it disappeared again, though it resurfaced in the 1960s for university centennial activities, bearing 26 class ribbons.

FRESHMAN CAPS

The class of 1916 presented a custom that would last until the late 1950s. Purple and white beanies were sold for $1 to freshmen who were supposed to wear them to all home sporting events and on Tuesdays and Thursdays. If freshmen were caught without their head cap, the varsity athletes would paddle them or dunk them in large water tanks.

LIVE MASCOTS

Before Willie the Wildcat appeared on the scene, there were two notable mascots on campus. From 1906 to 1909 a black Labrador named Boscoe represented K-State at sporting events.

In 1922, two university veterinary graduates working in Twin Falls, Idaho brought the idea of a bobcat mascot named Touchdown to campus. The idea took root and the custom of live bobcats as the school mascot continued. The Touchdowns were retired in 1978.

THE CLASS SPADE

In 1892, George L. Clothier planted an ivy vine near the main entrance of Anderson Hall with a new spade and started a tradition of trickery among classes. For several years the spade was stolen, buried, hidden and stolen again among the classes.

“In May, 1895, the greatest series of class fights this college ever has seen began between the senior and junior classes,” Floyd B. Nichols wrote in the 1912 Royal Purple Yearbook. “The cause of the disturbance was the refusal of the class of 1895 to give up the spade.”

To end class wars, Clarence Holsinger ran to the banks of the flooded Blue River one night and tossed the spade into its currents.

BANNED

There has been only one tradition reported throughout the years to be banned at K-State: The Smooch Line. It originated from the concept of greek pinning ceremonies, followed announcements of pinnings and engagements at organized houses.

Dr. Benjamin Lafene, 1957 student health director, said the kissing would lead to various diseases of the mouth. Instead of smooches, handshaking became the tradition.

FLASH CARD SECTIONS

Though the K-Block, or flash card section, was seen in the 1920s it did not take root until 1957. Its intention was to increase student participation at home football games. By 1958, the section had 1,200 participants and several designs. During games a yell leader would call out a number and each fan would hold up a colored, numbered card. Though there is not a formal flash card section anymore, present day football and basketball stands tend to be littered with homemade signs cheering on the Wildcats.

Dani’s tips for saving cash

Danielle Spellmeier

As a college student, I look for ways to save money in everything I do. One of the primary ways I am able to accomplish that is by buying off-brand products when grocery shopping. I’ve come up with a few tips to help others search for off-brands and save money:

1. Most of the time it is the same product just in different packaging. If you don’t feel like you’re getting the same thing, then check for the active ingredients and compare the brand to the off-brand. If they both have the same stuff in it, then go with the cheaper one. It is as simple as that. Think about off-brand cereals, candy, chips, crackers and even sodas.

2. When buying medication, check with your pharmacist about generic brands to see which will treat the same ailments as the brand name and why. Again, most of the time the same active ingredients will be found in both, so just go with whatever is less expensive. The generic for Motrin is ibuprofen, Aleve is naproxen, and other medications have different generic names than the brand names. However, don’t automatically assume that the generic is the cheapest. You should also look at the volume or amount of the container. A tube of a name brand toothpaste can cost $3. The generic of the same kind of toothpaste can cost $2.25. If the name brand toothpaste has 7 ounces and the generic has 4 ounces, and you will save money by choosing the name brand. If you buy the generic, you pay approximately 56 cents per ounce. If you buy the name brand product, you pay approximately 32 cents per ounce.

3. Whenever possible, buy your milk and milk products from local farmers. Milk is not something that needs a name brand on it to be good. Milk comes from cows. That doesn’t change depending on the name on the container. By buying locally, you are also supporting local farmers. You may also be able to get fresher milk locally than from a grocer who has milk shipped from across the country.

Sometimes people are not able to buy generic brands due to allergies, but if you can you should. I’m not trying to say that generic is always the best option, but just don’t knock it until you have tried it.

Performance Series finds new kind of audience

Pauline Kennedy | COLLEGIAN

McCain Auditorium brought the 1930s back to life last night, when the Performance Series welcomed the nationally-touring show Annie.

The nearly sold out show was the fourth of the semester for the series. Todd Holmberg, executive director of McCain Auditorium, said with the type of show Annie was, there were many people that were coming to a McCain show for the first time.

“We’re extremely pleased,” he said. “For a Wednesday and a school night we are blown away by the turnout.”

The show brought back the old story of a young orphan girl, holding out hope that her parents would one day come back to get her. It’s a story of hope, love and always seeing the silver lining. The tale of Annie has been a part of pop culture for decades, becoming very well known from its time on Broadway and eventually in theaters. But, the idea came from the comic strip, “Little Orphan Annie,” by Harold Gray in the early 1920’s. Gray was inspired from a James Whitcomb Riley poem “Little Orphan Annie,” which told of a young girl who worked hard and taught children to mind their manners.

Gray’s comic strip, however, was not always the happy-go-lucky Annie, but had underlying political messages and somewhat violent and dangerous situations.

The McCain performance focused the Broadway tone, complete with its many hits like “Tomorrow,” and “You’re Never Fully Dressed Without a Smile.” Many audience members were happy that the McCain Performance Series has had such a variety of shows.

“It makes McCain seem more family-oriented,” said Alisha Ball, freshman in business administration.

“It’s great to have something so well done that everyone can enjoy,” said Manhattan resident Carol Elmore. “It’s very professionally done and the quality is outstanding.”
